A MODEL BABY FARM

A DESCRIPTION OF ONE OF THE INSTITUTIONS

If there be one charity more divine than another it is that which gives the benefit of a refined and home life and culture to little children largely deprived of all these by the necessities or vices of their parents.

Of such is the kingdom of heaven, said the Good Master as he took all the children in His arms and blessed them. Like unto heaven in purity and innocence. But left to run in our streets to have few or any of the comforts of home how soon the innocence is banished and the purity marred. Doubly blessed should be that strong hand which reaches out to save both innocence and purity.

The following letter from a correspondent of the Chicago Inter Ocean giving an account of the charity Kindergartens of Boston, under the patronage of Mrs Shaw, nee Miss Agassiz, cannot fail to be of interest to our readers. The picture is one which ought to inspire others to go and do likewise.

BOSTON MASS., Sept 13. If you take the Mount Pleasant street cars in Boston, and get off at Albany street you will see on the corner or one of the four corners a roomy, square, old fashioned frame house standing in the middle of a large well kept yard. This house used to be the Davis mansion—is now known as the Albany Street Kindergarten and Nursery, one of thirty similar charitable institutions founded and supported by Mrs Quincy Shaw of Cambridge. Mrs Shaw is undoubtedly known to you as the daughter of the late Prof. Agassiz. As I say, thirty of these homes are now in successful operation. They are entirely for the benefit of working women. Mrs Shaw has taken hold in a portion of Boston where this class of persons is numerous.

THE DAVIS MANSION

in question was rescued from the hands of a liquor vendor, for the more humane business now conducted underneath its roof. The house had plenty of spacious room, model quaint with broad fire places and carved wood work. Through the many windows the sun shone on the evil spirit of Mrs Shaw substituted the good.

The large yard suggested one pure spot for childish games and so, with these good foundations to build upon, Mrs Shaw induced the enemy of men to give place to her ministering angels.

The house, so soon as our saloon keepers and his abominable wares were gone underwent a severe course of cleansing, painting, and papering. Its grounds were built and the interior slightly altered to meet the demand of the incoming tenants. The yard was cleared of debris, a lawn made and flowers planted. When at last all was sweet and fair, convenient and comfortable, Mrs Shaw and her aids decided to go into the highways and hedges and invited the children in to happiness, beauty, comfort and cleanliness.

FROM THE LOWEST HOVELS

they came and still come, from morning until night and they are fed, cared for, amused, instructed. And if ever the word kindergarten meant anything, here may we look for fruit. I do not doubt that industry, neatness, and order, besides the higher virtues of kindly deeds, truth and purity will blossom and bear fruit in many lives because of the intelligent care bestowed on these little waifs in the Albany street child garden.

Entering the front door we came into a broad hall, extending the length of the house, light and airy, with a hardwood floor, beautiful pictures, a piano. There, too, are the low kindergarten tables placed around three sides of a quadrangle, the teacher seated in the middle. The children fairly shone, so clean were the faces, the hands, and aprons. These aprons are furnished by Mrs Shaw, and kept at the nursery, hence until one catches a glimpse of the clumsy shoes and indescribable cut of the dresses or trousers, it is hard to imagine these children as coming from homes where clean aprons and frequent face washings do not abound.

Passing from this hall into the room on the left, we enter what must have been the parlors, now thrown into one large room (the main kindergarten). There we found two fire places, deep window seats, carvings over the doors, and fluted cornices. With these pleasant reminders of old-time solidity and comfort, we have combined the soft brown tints of modern paint and paper.

The windows are draped with white, flowers bloom on the broad shelves, the Madonna from out her ivy-covered frame looks down upon the happy faces. Artistic panels and Japanese decorations make plain the fact that cultivated minds and hands planned and executed the decoration. Here, too, we found low tables and rubber tipped chairs, and over their work. A sand table seemed a valuable acquisition. From this room we passed into the hall again, and across to the room of the advanced kindergarten class. This room is no less large as the one first described, but like it in general detail and finish. Here, however, I noticed one thoroughly Boston device—a border of turkey red just above the wainscotting. On this red were tacked, with architect's nails, pretty and appropriate chromos, a space being left between each picture. The effect was very pleasing, and no doubt this dado is a constant source of amusement to the children. The room in the rear of the one just spoken of was given up to the matron's private office—from whence opened a small parlor where the parents are interviewed. Connecting with this is a large closet devoted to toilet purposes where the children are made ready for their teachers. All these apartments are as thoroughly neat and complete in appointments as the most fastidious person could desire.

Still beyond we found the kitchen and laundry. The cook was washing dishes and the laundry maid was up to her elbows in soapsuds, but not one particle of dust was to be seen, not a suggestion of disorder visible. In the kitchen in front of two pleasant windows, stood a long table covered with a bright red cloth, a splint rocking chair near by was very suggestive of rest, when those dishes were washed.

The oak graining gave a warm look to the room, and, on the whole, I can imagine worse things than being cook in the Albany street kinder-garten and nursery.

THE PLAY GROUND

A yard at the back of the house is given up for a play ground.

Having finished the lower floor we entered the broad hall, and from there, as our usual point of departure, ascended to the realm of the babies. We entered the nursery pleasant, neat, artistic—a fire in the open fire place as the day was misty and slightly chill.

We found the playthings put away, and the two toddlers waiting each for its turn to go freshly polished (that word seems the only one fit to describe the intense slickness of those hands). We followed the pleasant nurse as she marshalled three or four tiny things to the large, light open closet where the ceremony was performed.

From there we turned to the sleeping room, each baby has its daily nap. There we saw many little cots or maple cribs with snow white sheets, pillows, and spreads. Every crib was carefully made save one, where we saw a baby sleeping the curtains down, and we treading on tiptoe for its sake. Opening from this is the sleeping, or nap room for the older children and here I grieve to say I saw TWO YOUNG THINGS IN DISGRACE the only punishment in the kindergarten being a banishment from that happy place to bed. By this time the sound of the piano warned us to seek the lower hall again if we wished to witness the noonday meal. Down stairs we went to the large room, spread with fresh white cloths. For each child a plate, spoon, and bowl of bread and milk were placed. At a side table the matron was making ready saucers of rice, and a delighted child was adding sugar to each allowance. I am not guilty of the least shade of exaggeration when I say that all the table appointments were without a flaw. I saw the china closet where not only neatness and convenience were considered, but beauty as well. The children, protected by clean bibs (times they call them in Boston) marched in to the sound of music, and quietly took their seats, eating with evident relish their wholesome lunch.

I noticed the rather elegant manner with which these children of the street handled their spoons and was told that they are carefully taught to observe these minor courtesies of social life.

A SWING CLASS

In the afternoon the older children spend part of their time in a sewing class while the little ones play and take naps until their mothers call for them at night.

Can the good results be estimated of this daily atmosphere of order, cleanliness, comfort and beauty?

STATE NEWS.

Androscoggin

The Journal says: Lumber is now considerably lower than it was when the season opened. Good spruce dimension is now selling at thirteen dollars and far at twelve dollars, or about two dollars less than last spring. Notwithstanding the extent of lumber manufacturing in this county hardly a week passes without the arrival of several carloads of lumber from the upper Kennebec. The larger part of the boards used in the manufacture of the immense number of cases used by the corporations for shipping, most extensively by the Bleachery and Bates, comes from Kennebec mills. The Bleachery alone, uses nearly two million feet of box boards, per annum. Lewiston either cannot or does not compete with the Kennebec on this light stock. It is said that the cost of driving logs to Fairfield is less than to Lewiston and there has been some talk of a log driving company on this river, the same as on the Kennebec. There seems to be a division of opinion among the lumbermen, as to whether they can drive logs cheaper combined or individually. It would be a source of gratification, if all the lumber used in Lewiston, should be baptized in the Androscoggin.

The Journal says the canned goods production is likely to be cut short this season, owing to less crops, of several kinds. Peaches are favorites, and their short comings forward is to interfere with proper layouts of domestic teas. Peaches are growing less and higher every day. It is a question whether as much, if not more money is made from a short or long crop. Tomatoes are particularly short this year, to the great detriment, if not loss, to packers. Dealers here who wish to buy tomatoes in the can are refused goods or prices by some holders. What the price will be is uncertain but it must be high if all that is said about the crop is true. Canned tomatoes have been wholesaled at one dollar per dozen cans. Very few cans are in the market to-day, for the reason that packers are unwilling to sell or make contracts. According to report very few factories are packing, having little to pack. The blight or black rot killed the early crop, and the drought has killed the late crop. Sales for future delivery were made early at ninety cents for three-pound cans, and these have advanced in price thirty or forty cents. Packers are asking more than retailers have heretofore charged their customers.

The Journal says that two dogs suddenly darted through a fence, and frightened Mr. E. P. Ham's horse, as Mr H with his wife and baby, were riding on the Sabattus road, on Sunday. The colt gave a jump that suddenly overturned the top buggy, and threw Mr. Ham out. He struck on his feet. Mrs. Ham was caught in the carriage top and was dragged a short distance by the colt; before falling out. Her husband picked her up, in the road unconscious. The baby rolled into the carriage top and was dragged further than the mother, coming out uninjured. The colt did not run far. Mrs. Ham remained in an unconscious state for about half an hour, but apparently did not receive any injuries beyond a severe jolting, and a slight bruise on her head. She is recovering from the accident, nicely. Mr Ham and the baby were much the worse for the adventure. The little one had a solitary ride of about fifteen feet in the upset carriage and that it was not hurt seems almost a miracle.

Cumberland.

The Argus says. Fred W. Roberts and William A Frothingham, the former bookkeeper and the latter bill clerk for the Storer brothers, met with an accident Saturday, which, in the case of Mr. Roberts, proved quite serious. It seems the gas in the vault where the books and valuable papers of the firm are kept, was accidentally blown out, and when it became time to put away the books Mr. Roberts opened the vault door and finding the gas out struck a match to light it again, when there was a loud explosion and a volume of flame flashed out instantly. Mr. Roberts face and hands were severely burned and most of his hair was singed off. Mr. Frothingham who stood just behind Roberts, was slightly burned about the face. Mr Roberts was carried to his boarding house and a physician called. He was getting along nicely Monday.

Saccarappa, at present, is a very busy place. The new dye house is nearing completion. The new large mill is being rushed by over two hundred men so as to be closed in before snow flies, the brick work is up to the second story. The Haskell Silk Co, have built on a new front even with the street to accommodate more machinery. This company is obliged to run night and day to keep up with the orders. New houses are being built in every direction.

The Thurlow Brothers have the best season ever realized upon their farm in Allen's Corner, 1,000 bushels of onions. Their crops of all kinds have done splendidly.

Kennebec

At an early hour on Sunday the roads were alive with teams going to the Second Advent tent meeting at China village. Hundreds must have attended.

The Wentworth spring axle factory at Gardiner has closed up for repairs.

Knox

The weather is fine for harvesting grain. Ferrar Bros are doing an immense business threshing at their new mill at South Waldoboro, having all they can do every day, and on several days of last week working far into the evening. Their mill is patronized by the farmers of Union and Waldoboro, as well as those of Washington.

Lincoln

The Bristol Agricultural Society and Farmers Club hold their twelfth annual fair on their grounds Oct 4th, 5th and 6th. Premiums will be offered for best drawing for any oxen and steers owned in Bristol. On the last day of the fair there will be a trial of engines between the Massasoit of Damariscotta and Triumphs of Waldoboro, for a prize of $100. First prize $60, second prize, $40.

A World-Wide Sorrow.

Never before in the history of the world has there been such a manifestation of universal sorrow as that which now finds expression throughout all Christendom, at the tragic death of the President of the United States, after his heroic and unparalleled struggle for life.

As the route by which the weary man, who was so recently borne in the swift train of health giving breezes, the solemn funeral cortege slowly retraced the journey yesterday, followed by the tearful sympathies of fifty millions of people, and to-day all that is mortal of the noble patriot and heart-hearted statesman, will still and cold beneath the dome of that national Capitol in which he has so faithfully served the Republic, and where only a short months ago, he turned from the plaudits of multitudes who were greeting the new President, to kiss the wife and mother, who were nearest his heart in that supreme moment of gratified ambition. It is not strange that the whole world should pause to pay the tribute of sympathy for such a life and death, for the life-work of JAMES A. GARFIELD was in behalf of all humanity, and his death came in such form as to arouse all the tender emotions of mankind.

We know that the work he loved so well will be carried forward, we know that the great Government of which he the beloved Chief Magistrate must be unchecked, we know that already the mantle and authority of his exalted office have passed to his Constitutional successor, and yet we cannot so instantly adjust to feel that it is our President who lies in the stillness of death, and only when the last rites of burial shall have been paid, can our people fully recognize the change and extend to the new President the support and sympathy so exceptionally called for by the distressing circumstances of his accession.

In the meantime President Arthur is proving himself by his bending quietly with the mourning people beside the sacred dust, and those who have so loved and revered the great patriot who has passed away, will heredy to hold up earnestly the hands of his successor in every effort for the welfare of the Republic.

DEATH OF JUDGE MAY.

On Sabbath May died at his residence in Saco, on Tuesday afternoon after a long and distressing illness of several years, affecting his mind as well as his body. He was born in Winthrop July 8, 1802, and was nearly eighty years old at his decease. He was educated at the Monmouth and Hallowell Academies and in his 20th year decided to make law his profession. He graduated from 1828 to 1831 with Dudley Hall, Esq., of Wayne, and practiced in his native town until 1852, rising rapidly in his profession. He was especially skillful in legal analysis and became noted for his ability in the examination of witnesses. In May, 1855 he was appointed an Associate Justice of the Supreme Judicial Court of Maine, and discharged the duties of that office with ability and honor until the end of his term, in 1862, when he returned to the practice of law in company with his son. In 1867 Judge May was appointed by Register in Bankruptcy and held the office until February, 1873, when he resigned and his son was appointed in his stead.

During his professional life Judge May was on terms of intimate friendship with many leading lawyers of the State, including Hon. Geo. Evans, Henry W. Paine, Senator Morrill and others. Of his kind character the Lewiston Journal says:

As a citizen Judge May has always taken a prominent stand in his native State. He has been liberal, public spirited and a friend of his country and of humanity. He was early identified with the anti slavery movement—one of the pioneers who did not hesitate to speak and act for that cause and to show himself an earnest worker for its advancement, in the days when it was not popular to be an abolitionist and when it required some resolution as well as strong convictions of duty, to encounter the opposition which it met with at first received. He co-operated with many other prominent advocates in Maine of that great moral reform, among whom were Gen. Fessenden, Prof. Smith of Bowdoin College, and Rev. David Thurston, of Winthrop, and notwithstanding its unpopularity he always esteemed it a privilege and a pleasure to associate with and entertain at his house the courageous men who performed in the hard work of the early years of the cause. He was a great admirer of Frederick Douglass, whom he used to call with Daniel Webster of the negro race, and on many times has in the dark days received his expressions of sympathy, and he has shared his hospitality.

THE PRESIDENT'S MOTHER.

SHE RECEIVED NEWS OF HIS DEATH.

Mother Garfield is now at Solon, with her daughter, Mrs. Larabee. At five o'clock Tuesday morning the village bell tolled. At six o'clock came this private telegram:

"EIBERON, N. J.

"Mrs. Eliza Garfield:

"James died this evening at 10 35. He calmly breathed his life away.

(Signed.) "D. G. SWAIM."

Mrs. Larabee's first thought was to her mother. The latter was sleeping calmly, and they did not awaken her until eight o'clock, the old lady having slept constantly since eleven P. M. At that hour Mrs. Larabee passed her door with a heavy heart and found her up, dressed, and engaged in reading the Bible. It was thought best not to break the news until Mrs. Garfield had eaten breakfast. Oddly enough, she did not insist upon hearing the news until she had finished her meal. Then taking the fatal telegram from the shelf she read it aloud to her, but Miss Ellen took it from her trembling hand.

"Grandma," she said, "would you be surprised to get bad news this morning?"

"Why, I don't know," said the old lady.

"Well, I shouldn't," said Mrs. Larabee. "I have been fearing and expecting it all the morning."

"Grandma," said Ellen, "there is bad news."

"Is he dead?" asked the old lady, tremulously.

"He is."

The quick tears started in the sensitive eyes, but no violent paroxysm of grief, no expression of frenzy, told of the anguish within. "Is it true?" she asked with quivering lips. "Then the Lord help me, for if he is dead, what shall I do?" She was rendered weak and a little nervous by the announcement, and was obliged, once or twice to repair to her room, where, in solitude, she might begin to comprehend the awful truth, but she was not contented to remain there and soon returned to the sitting room.

About half past nine o'clock Mrs. Garfield was found sitting in a rocking chair waiting for news, and she read the morning paper with eagerness. "It cannot be that James is dead," she murmured, "I cannot understand it. I have no further wish to live, and I cannot live if it is so."

Although her general health is good at present, many fear her words are prophetic, and Mrs. Larabee dares not hope for her sake herself. But feeling keenly, as she does, her great affliction, never once has she hinted at a lack of faith in the Supreme One, that all is not intended for the best. "It is providential," she said. "I can firmly believe that God knows best and I must not murmur."

Mrs. Mehitable Troybridge, the remaining sister of Gen. Garfield, was also notified of his death this morning. Having been sick for several weeks, it was feared this blow might prostrate her, but she bears up better than might be expected. Both of the sisters appear more unnerved than the aged mother. The fortitude of the latter can be better appreciated when it is remembered that on Wednesday of this week was her eightieth birthday. For about a month she has been in Hiram, but about a week ago she returned to Solon where she expects to remain with Mr. and Mrs. Larabee until she is notified to make some change. It will be remembered that the only brother of the President is living near Grand Rapids, Mich. Since the 14th of November last, there have occurred five deaths in the family, as follows: Mrs. Hattie J. Palmer, Nov. 15th, her son Randolph, on Feb. 10th; Thos. Garfield, on June 18th, and Miss Cordelia Arnold, on June 21st. Just ten months ago, Monday, Thos. Garfield and the late President celebrated their birthdays at a joint festival in Randall. Their birthdays came on the same days, the General being forty nine years old and Thos. Garfield seventy nine.

WORCESTER CONVENTION.

Speech of Hon. Thomas B. Reed.

The following speech was delivered by Hon. Thomas B. Reed at the Republican Convention in Worcester, Massachusetts yesterday:

Gentlemen: I am here to address you to-day because I could not be insensible to the honor of your invitation. But at the outset you must permit me to say that the lot could not have fallen to me in a more difficult time. This is a party Convention met for party purposes to begin a campaign to end in a party victory. And yet for the last three months this nation has been almost oblivious of party disputes, has almost forgotten partisan classifications. By one of those wonderful transformations of which a free people alone are capable, we passed in a moment of time on the 2d of July from loud sounding, bitter, interminable party strife and ragging the solemn hush with which for all these long and mournful weeks this great nation awaiting the issue of life and death have stood by the bedside of its stricken chief. During all this time men have forgotten the past and disregarded the future, have stood side by side as if the partisanship of the past had never been and the partisanship of the future was never to be. Though mournful beyond language in its cause this spectacle has comfort for us as a people. The black cloud of our disaster has had its silver lining that it gives new proof to those who doubted that government by all the governed will always prove equal to any crisis. This is not the first time we have stood all together and it will not be the last. Every great crisis begets the great enthusiasm which meets and masters it. But it is idle to expect that exalted feeling like this will continue or can continue. Like all things earthly it perishes with the using. It works its work peacefully and beneficent and goes its way. Twenty years ago when Sumter was fired on the whole northern land seemed in the twinkling of an eye welded at white heat into one solid, indivisible enthusiastic unity. But before the four years had gone by party drill and organization were as much needed in the rear as army organization and the manual of arms were needed at the front.

Some people, mostly those who stand aside above us all out of the dust of common life call these moments of national unanimity rising above party, as if party purposes, party principles, party name and even parties themselves were ignoble, unworthy and base. This is a gross misuse of words. This is no rising above party. It has no relation to party. It is only the application to a crisis of the same common sense of which alone parties must rest for their ultimate success. Parties are no more or less disputed questions. National unanimity is either about questions on which all are agreed or it happens where is a time of great peril some man or set of men holding office must act and take the responsibility, and we all agree to stand by them, because there is no other way of reserving to ourselves the right to abuse them and belittle them after the danger is over. We can all remember when we stood by Grant as he fought it out on that line, all Summer. Some of us now seem to be exercising our reserved rights on him at present. While your ships are sailing over the sea of safety, there may be much sensible dispute over stowage and adjustment of compass, over freights and charges, about rigging and engines, but let a ship strike and everything changes. Every energy is bent to lift the ship. Even the very cargo, for the carriage of which the ship is built, must take its chances with the rest. We don't call this rising above commerce. It is only applying the same method to save that we were applying to improve. Unanimity is the heroic treatment for acute disease. Time and parties are for chronic cases. In national life it is as necessary to improve as to save. Improvement is salvation. Progress and improvement are indispensable and essential. We must always go on. We cannot go back. We need no history of Greece and Rome, no Assyria no Persepolis or even Tadmor in the Wilderness to teach us this lesson. It is a fact inherent in the nature of man in the very constitution of society. And my friends it is a very troublesome fact. It is said that there is no peace for the wicked. That must be so, although I have seen some of them in very comfortable circumstances, but it is equally certain that in this world there is no rest for the righteous. What you do of progress today, only lights up more vividly the path way of the duty of to-morrow. Every true reform puts the rest of the world out of line and it has to be brought up. Hence the world hates to be reformed. It tries all sorts of short cuts to peace and never gets there. Our political history is full of examples. Everybody remembers the election of 1852. All our influential men agreed that this slavery agitation business was to end and the people all ratified it. Poor Pierce was elected by an overwhelming vote, and everybody said we have got rid of these Abolitionist howlers and will take a rest. But wrong never gets settled affirmatively, right never gets settled negatively. We could not by any device dodge the contest of the last twenty years. We had to have it with all its horrors and all its unspeakable blessings.

It is the fashion now-a-days, among independent gentlemen at intervals of kicking across the traces of the world's team, to sneer at parties and at party feeling and especially of party organization. For my part I believe that parties are not only the greatest helpers to the world's progress, but that no progress is possible without them. I do not mean parties merely, I mean party organization as well—even party drill and party discipline. This is a government of the people of the whole people. We have heard that expression before perhaps, but as a nation we don't half believe it. If you were to listen to the gushing Greenbacker you would think we were prostrate at the feet of capital. If you listen to the capitalist you would think only communism was in store for us. If you listened to the politician you would think that newspapers were absorbing all power. If you gave ear to the newspapers you would see only the wide open mouth of the ward politician, devouring all before him. None of these things is the truth. Neither the politicians, the newspapers, the capitalists nor the Greenbackers, neither the best men nor the worst rule us. It is the average knowledge and sense of the whole people which rules. And our government is founded on the theory that that is the best rule. Our doctrine is that the best government is not the government of the best men, not the government of the wisest or of the most learned, but the government of all. Where, then is the hope of our progress in the future? It is not only in the increase but in the spread of knowledge among our whole people. What, then, will best spread knowledge? Answer discussion full and free not only candid discussion, with sense and without temper, but discussion without sense and with temper. If men are thinking without sense the sooner they talk it out the sooner we can beat it down. But somebody will say all this hot talk of partisan newspapers and party orators of both sides leaves every body where they were before. I do not believe that. No two men in a corner grocery ever vexed the neighborhood with a loud dispute without modifying the opinions of each other, and without getting nearer the truth. If the truth happens to lie between them. Party or agitation promotes discussion both public and private. We cannot say they arrive at absolute truth. They tend to it. There is no absolute truth in secular things. Even the Polar star is not due north, and the best compasses have a local variation. Yet we complain of the turmoil and cost of Presidential elections but they are worth all they cost. To go through one of them is a liberal education. How can it help being so. When all the able public men, all the editors, every body with a faculty for discussion, devote their whole energies for months into throwing light on public questions, present past and to come, how can the nation help knowing more than it did before?

But if there must be parties we have to choose which one we will belong to. Of course one can be a golden butterfly of glory and flit from one to the other, or as Whitelaw Reid said of another class of citizens, one can sit on the fence and throw stones impartially at both. But there are odds in parties, nevertheless. Party action in matter of government in the past has not been an accident. Party action in the future will not be an accident. It will always arise from the nature and character of the party. If you will permit I shall offer some proofs why it is that for the last twenty years the Republican party has taken the right side in the main and the Democratic party the wrong side. The Democratic party has as able leaders as the Republican, but every party acts not from direction of its leaders but from its average of knowledge and sense and the average of knowledge and sense of the Republican party is higher than the average of knowledge and sense in the Democratic party. I don't mean to say that the average is much higher. I think we are a great ways short of perfection. We have had our whiskey thieves in one administration and our Star Route plunderings in another, although I confess I shall be better satisfied about the last when I see just what is proved by trial by jury as well as by trial by newspaper. The difference between parties may be slight, but it is great enough to be the difference between progress and halting, between good government, prosperity and success and the reverse. Small differences make the survival of the fittest and develop all things living. Small differences are what make success or defeat. When two of your great mills stand side by side, one prosperous and the other bankrupt, it may be only a tenth of a cent a yard in the cost of manufacture which has made the difference. Honesty is the best policy. Every body knows that. If there is anything settled in this world it is that. Yet when you look around and see how slippery, trickery and deceit sometimes prosper in a pathed world, now often intelligent people straightforward, slow, often plain men get shut to the bottom and knaves to the top of the pack you can hardly help thinking that honesty is the best policy by a good deal smaller margin by than you could wish. And yet with a dreadful fool a man is who chooses any thing but honesty—what a lack of patriotism there is in a man who fails to choose the best party simply because it is not world wide better than the other. Parties are no, to be weighed by their platforms. It is easy to make the professions. Parties like men, are to be weighed by their deeds. Character is not in the mouth but in the life. I am willing the Republican party should be judged by its walk as well as its conversation. I know that this is volvely pointing with pride, whereof of late there have been some sinners. I am glad to belong to a party which can afford to have its history illuminated. Nor do I begrudge the Democratic brother his specks. He really has to say something. In proving the superiority of the Republican party with reference to its part I do not mean to talk about the Rebellion. I wish that the subject as between the two sections might never be mentioned again, but I would not have this hopper by suppression of what men think, but by cessation of the causes which made them think as they did. There has been a hopeful change for the last few years. Four years ago, when I entered Congress I listened to a reverie of wonder at the reproaches thrown at us as violators of the Constitution, as military usurpers, as traitors against Sherman and Grant and finally, it the preposterous claim seriously made that the true guardian of liberty, of country and constitution had always been in the Democratic party. So far as well as North, without the break in the line of apostolic succession. When that was accompanied by demands for retirement of all the leaders in the war, I confess I did think that the war ought to be alluded to. But the last session made a great change. The last session of Congress was place itself. The steady determination of the North that some things should be considered settled had its effect. For the future the hope I hold is good. No man can rejoice more that I do at the material prosperity of the South. Its salvation is there. Business is a wonderful civilizer. Whenever the South leaves off fighting for its rights and begins fighting for its interests, its feet will be on the pathway of progress and soon toleration of opinion, free thought and free men will make emancipation complete and enfranchisement secure. But while silence is to be hoped for between the two sections, it must and cannot be forgotten that there was a time when it was fatal to this division which side parties took, and that the Democratic party took the wrong side. They did it, not by accident, but because it was in the bone. In estimating character you cannot leave it out. It would be polite to do so but it would not be accurate.

Time and your patience would fail me to enumerate a tithe of the proofs of the wisdom of the Republican Party, wisdom not sounding in words but in deeds, not platforms but history? Who started out demanding merely freedom in the territories? Is there any Democrat who doesn't rejoice that we were successful? What Democrat is there even of those who went to Chicago in the darkest hour of the war and declared it all a failure who doesn't bless our stars that he was wrong? What Border Bourbon Democrat now on the stump in Virginia would like to call emancipation wrong? Think over all the governmental action of the last twenty years which has really affected the happiness or prosperity of the people and see how little there is to regret. Think over all the measures which the Democrats have fought for and see if there is one of them which you wish had been tried! Finance does not belong to the past. Try them on that. Don't you remember how Pendleton, Democratic candidate for the Vice Presidency, swept over New England declaring that a government promise to pay money with interest and on time could honestly be paid by another promise without interest? What a nation this would have been to-day had such folly prevailed? And this brings me to something on which I wish to dwell for a moment. We have become a great nation. More than fifty millions of people live under our laws. Across thousands of miles stretch our limitless acres. Our wealth is enormous. Our enterprises are intricate and wide spread. To govern such a nation, to so manage the affairs of such a people as not to disturb or hamper their enterprises, requires sense, good business sense. And I venture to affirm that the history of the Democratic party for the last ten years is conspicuous for an abundant lack of that. Five years ago they began their campaign with a fixed determination to repeal the resumption act. They declared that not only we must not resume, but that we could not resume. Their leader, Samuel J. Tilden, by far their ablest man, in that long mystification of non committal rhetoric with which he accepted their nomination strove through hundreds of sentences to shake the public faith. Will you permit me to say that through it all, glimmers the fact that he knew better every moment of the time? He did know better, but in this country parties rule men, not men parties. And after they were beaten before the public they still signalized their devotion to mistake and error by trying to repeal the resumption act. Their leader in this attempt they tried to make Governor of Ohio. They attacked the Resumption Act not only by fair means but by foul. One fact of the famous committee for the investigation of frauds in the Presidential election of 1876—a committee which satisfied even a Democratic National Convention, the Convention of 1880 that Mr. Tilden was neither elected President nor eligible—deserves to be placed in its true relations with other facts. It was the month of May, 1878, while the Secretary of the Treasury was in the midst of the vast anxieties of the preparations for resumption, when the confidence of the country most needed staying, that the Democratic House chose to attack him with a base charge founded on nothing but the word of a worthless fellow who had to allege his own perjury as the very foundation of his testimony. When I remember what buffetings the Secretary endured from wise editors from itinerant politicians and from all the infuriated ignorance of the republic, and how strong and steadfast he stood, it is a satisfaction to believe as I do that when the passions and cavils of men and of parties have subsided, the name of John Sherman for his share in the great achievement of resumption will take its place in history, side by side with Robert Morris and Albert Gallatin and Alexander Hamilton.

Even when in the last Congress they had to pass a bill to refund part of the debt on an easy market, made so by our financial measures, they could not refrain from a lick an attack on the very method of institution from which and through which they were to borrow, as might have slaken but a moment to its centre but it prevailed. When they had full power in both branches they spent precious weeks of an extra session forced by themselves in battering at the Commander in Chief, the commander of the army, when they had already got in such a condition that it is doubtful if soldiers can stand Guiteau to his trial without somebody's evil.

But why multiply details? The best proof of the superior sense of the Republican party, can be stated in a sentence. We owe our success in the last election to the well considered approval of the business men of this country. What a curious peculiarity that is of the Democratic party that it always occupies our last year's camps. That every issue which they opposed while it was alive, they eagerly embrace when it is dead. They never opposed the war. In fact they won most of the battles. They never believed in slavery. They never connected republication in fact they are the only hard money men. Resumption was what they were really after, although they did seem to be going the other way. What unwilling witnesses they always become of their best year's sun wisdom. The courage with which they arise anew although the logic of the hard facts of twenty years is against them would be wonderful if we did not know that the right is against error, though never lost, is never won because error is perennial.

I am very much in earnest in calling your attention to this distinction in the nature of parties, for I believe it to be vital. Men range themselves according to the differences in their own natures. They think wisdom resides only with the men who are dead. They hold fast to what is already attained, and desire no change. Others believe that what we have got is only a stepping stone to what is to be, that down the ringing grooves of change flies a new and greater happiness for all and a broader hope. Men are progressive and conservative and on this they range themselves. It is so in all free nations. Although Russell seemed our foe and Gladstone was not our friend in our great need nevertheless, we recognize that in Gladstone and the statesmen who surround him and the party which follows him is the hope for England and her people. Parties are seldom formed on issues. They form themselves and the issues come in and they deal with them with what wisdom they have. Our own party was formed for freedom in the territories alone but it meets as utterly unanticipated by its founders, the issues of the war of conscription and enfranchisement of reconstruction and of finance, and no candid man can say that it did not meet them wisely and well. It is the fashion to say in times of political lull like this, there are no issues between parties why not try the other one now. Would it be wise policy to put a doubtful crew on board ship simply because the sails are in a fair day.

My friends let us make no mistake about this matter. If government by the people meant only the right to govern on election day, it would not be worth the talk we make about it. But it means the right to govern every day in the year. Our rulers do not die they obey. It is true in this government as in religion that whoever would be the chiefest must be the servant of all. We cannot escape our suffering and the influence of others. The duty then is plain not only to choose good men, but those who are sustained, strengthened and influenced by a good party.

Preparing to Leave Long Branch

The day is clear and cool There is but a few per on in the neighborhood of the Franklyn Cottage It has been determined to open the coffin between 8 30 A M and 9 A M in order that the residents may have an opportunity of viewing the remains of the late President The crowd is beginning to swell with residents and people from adjacent towns None of the Cabinet have made their appearance yet But it says the plans agreed upon yesterday will be carried out The special is expected to leave promptly at 10 30 A M

When the number of persons who accompany the remains to Washington will not go beyond that point it is understood that President Arthur has determined to go through to Cleveland with the Cabinet An additional guard has been placed about Franklyn Cottage to preserve order While the remains are lying in state

(9 A M)

Preparing the Remains at Long Branch

The arrangements have just been completed and notice given that all desiring to view the remains of the late Chief Magistrate A line has been formed and the people are passing single file through the cottage The sentinels are stationed on each side of the entrance to prevent more than one person entering at one time The casket is very unpretentious being covered with rich black cloth and with the exception of the heavy silver mountings is quite plain The only decoration is a wreath shaped sage pom which extends from the foot of the casket upwards The casket is placed in a room on the first floor and the people pass through without stopping The appearance of the late President is so changed that persons familiar with his natural countenance scarcely recognize him

The church bells are tolling and the crowd continues to increase It is expected the special train has run up to the Franklyn Cottage The entire train is heavily draped in mourning and presents a solemn appearance The line formed at 8 35 from the Elberon Hotel to the Franklyn Cottage has been diminished somewhat, thousands of new arrivals surge into the grounds every moment Ocean Avenue for two blocks in either direction is crowded with vehicles This order is one of extreme solemnity to every bearing of all classes is very quiet

(9 30 A M)

Religious Services

Half past nine Chief Justice Waite, Secretary and Mrs Blaine with other member of the Cabinet and their families a few friends, numbering in all about twelve or fifteen persons, arrived at the Franklyn Cottage and the doors were closed to visitors Religious services were conducted at request of Mrs Garfield, by Rev Chas Young of Long Branch When the moment for the solemnities was announced the windows and doors were closed and all minds hushed Owing to the necessity of starting the train promptly on time Colonel Rockwell had requested the officiating clergyman to occupy but five minutes

Feeling of Profound Sadness Abroad—Sympathy for this Country

LONDON Sept 21 The following is a fair sample of the newspaper comments on the death of President Garfield The Post says The message of the Queen to Mrs Garfield expresses the feeling of all of her subjects The whole nation has been keenly anxious for the recovery of the President a man as much respected abroad as he was in his own country, and the sadness of his death will be mourned in every English family as in every American township and homestead

At Rome

ROME, Sept 21 King Humbert telegraphed the condolence of himself and Queen The Foreign Minister has sent a similar telegram in the name of the Government and nation

The Bonifilla says The sentiments of condolence which the Royal family transmitted to Washington are the sentiments of the Italian Nation

At Bombay

BOMBAY, Sept. 21 The Death of President Garfield has excited universal regret

At Ottawa

OTTAWA Sept 21 A despatch of sympathy for the people of the United States has been forwarded to the British Minister at Washington by Sir Wm Hitchcock, acting Governor General

At Paris

PARIS Sept 21. The Americans have draped the whole of their section in the electric Exhibition building with festoons of crape President Grevy telegraphed a message of condolence to Mrs Garfield

Unprecedented Tribute

LONDON, Sept 21. Every hour increases the evidence that the present is the most remarkable demonstration of sympathy ever witnessed in Europe Bells of the parish churches in various places in England are tolled, which is a unprecedented tribute to a foreign ruler

The municipal bodies of Leeds, Hartlepool, Falmouth and other places passed resolutions of condolence The mourning flag was hoisted on Manchester cathedral

The Provincial papers rival those of London in expressions of sympathy.

In the Northwest

CHICAGO, Sept. 21. Despatches from numerous places throughout the Northwest are in the main repetitions of the reports heretofore sent, every community is mourning the death of the President. Public meetings were held at Peoria, Ill, Dubuque, Iowa, St Paul and many places of lesser note At all of which the same expression of tender regret and warmest sympathy was the burden of speeches and resolutions At very many points business was virtually suspended.

Departure of the Funeral Train—Along the Route

Immediately after the conclusion of the services at Franklyn Cottage Mrs. Garfield, accompanied by her son Harry, Col Swaim, Col. and Mrs. Rockwell, Miss Mollie Garfield and Miss Rockwell and Dr. Boynton and C. O. Rockwell, came from the cottage and entered the first coach Members of the Cabinet and their wives followed and took seats in the second coach. Mrs. Garfield was heavily veiled and in passing to the train exhibited the same fortitude which has characterized her throughout. In addition to the immediate members of the family the following composed the party in the train Private Secretary, J. Stanley Brown, Executive Clerk Warren Young, Jno R Vanwarmer, Chief Clerk, Post Office Department John Jamison, Railway Mail Service, Post Office Department Rudgely Hunt, son of the Secretary of the Navy, C F James son of the Postmaster General, Mr. Jay Stone, Private Secretary to Secretary Lincoln, Ex Sheriff Haggett of Brooklyn Col, H. C Corbin, and Messrs Atchison, Richard and other attendants upon the late President and Mrs Garfield During the sojourn here Just before the train was ready to start Gov. Ludlow and other State officials, accompanied by members of the Legislature, arrived on the scene

A few minutes before ten the casket was removed from the cottage by six strong men and passing through a guard of soldiers formed in parallel lines, was placed in the third coach The attendants and others who accompanied the party took seats in the fourth car

Dr Reyburn is the only surgeon who went on the special train At exactly ten o'clock the funeral train started from Franklyn cottage, going from the grounds very slowly The train reached Elberon station about 10 08 and stopped on about a quarter of a mile from the station To this point the special train which brought President Arthur and General Grant from New York was run, and guards were stationed in the vicinity to prevent any interference from the crowd, there being from 500 to 600 persons in the immediate neighborhood As soon as Pres ident Arthur s train was stopped alongside the train which bore the remains, the President and Gen Grant stepped across and entered the second car of the funeral train Gen Grant took the second seat from the last on the right hand side of the second car President Arthur sat the next seat front of Gen Grant, by himself, and the seat next in front of President Arthur was occupied by Secretary Blaine As the train moved out President Arthur had his hands on the backs of Secretary Blaine s seat and was gazing forward engaged in conversation with the Secretary The train arrived at Tinnecum Junction at 11 31 A M There were about 1 500 students from Prince ton at the Junction and had the track strewn for a hundred yards with flowers and also put some elegant flowers on the train as it slowed up for them

The train reached Grave s Ferry Junction at 12 50 P M and remained three minutes several hundred people assembled but the platform was kept clear by policemen Senator Jones, of Nevada, disembarked from the limited express which preceded the funeral train nine minutes behind it and came from New York, and boarded the latter intending to accompany it to Washington Postmaster General James alighted and shook hands with two or three friends who espied him The casket containing the remains of the dead President was read ily discernable from the platform through the car window The stop was unattended with any incident and at 12 15 the train moved rapidly off.

Guiteau the Assassin

WASHINGTON Sept 21 Everything in the jail is quiet this morning Guiteau is described as being somewhat restless but he alternately reads and writes He is the right to be engaged in writing his reflections on the shooting and the President s death It is generally thought by those who have examined the statutes that Guiteau cannot be convicted of murder under the District laws and Col Corkhill is now said to entertain that opinion

The Escort.

This morning Adjutant General Drum issued orders for volunteer troops of the District of Columbia, under command of Gen Web ter and United States marines and artillery under command of General Ayers, to assemble at the depot of the Baltimore & Potomac Railroad at 11 30 to receive and escort the remains of the late President to the Capitol. Orders were also issued for all officers of the Army on duty at the War Department to assemble in full uniform and with mourning emblems

How the President Looked After Death

The Post's Long Branch special says The journalists who have been so closely watching the President s case these weary weeks were given an opportunity for the first sight of the body to-day The President was laid out in the suit which he wore Inauguration Day His left hand laid across his dress after the manner he had in life This was done in order to make his resemblance as similar to life as possible The body is so greatly shrunken that artificial means had to be resorted to to fill the clothes the appearance of fitting. In addition to the natural shrinking from his illness the operation connected with attempted life his body is even a more emaciated state A plaster cast was taken of his face yesterday as well as of his right hand In life, the cast of the hand it was somewhat discolored so that his hand was not seen

The effects of oil used upon the face prior to taking the cast disfigured the features somewhat and slightly altered the color of the face, so that the appearance is very much less natural even than it was just after death The President had a massive head and the large bones show very prominently His cheeks are fallen in but the beard has been so arranged about the parotid gland as to conceal that terrible scar and such arrangements has been made about the pillow as to still further conceal the swelling which helped to sap away his life The undertaker says that in his opinion it will not be safe to expose the body after it leaves here The effects of the fluids used in embalming have such as to have already hardened the features

Decorations at the Capitol

WASHINGTON, Sept. 21 A scene of unusual bustle and activity is visible at the Capitol to-day Workmen are engaged in arranging graceful festoons and rosettes of black crape The external decorations are nearly complete and although not very elaborate or profuse are arranged in perfect taste, and the black drapery contrasted with the white marble of the edifice forms a spectacle of sombre beauty, rarely equalled The rotunda is heavily draped almost to the top and the gilt frames of historical paintings are closely covered with crape The finishing touches are now being given the catafalque which occupied the centre of the rotunda with the head to the East. This has been erected under the direction of Jno E Mitchell and although simple and plain, is in accordance with expressed wish

Arrangements in Ohio

COLUMBUS Sept 21 Adjutant General Smith to-day issued an order to all batteries connected with the Ohio militia to fire minute guns next Monday at two o'clock An order has been issued for Gov. Foster's military staff to assemble at Cleveland next Monday The Governor's Guard and Barracks Band will leave for Cleveland Sunday night.

Presidential Honors

ST. LOUIS, Sept. 21. Mayor Ewing telegraphed Mayor Herrick, of Cleveland, this morning, that "The hearse that was used at Springfield on the occasion of the burial of President Lincoln is in this city in good order, and is tendered by the owner, Mr. Jesse Arnot, for use at Cleveland on Monday next"

Responses from Senators

WASHINGTON Sept. 21. Sergeant-at-Arms Bright of the Senate, in response to his invitation, has received answers from the following Senators expressing their intention to be present Messrs Hawley Edmunds, Sewall, Bayard, Blair, Mitchell Sherman, Jones, of Florida, Shulsbury and Hoar, and they will all arrive here before Thursday evening. Senator Platt's son telegraphed that his father is in the Adirondack Mountains and his health too precarious to admit of a hurried journey Despatches are being constantly received from members of the two houses announcing their departure for Washington.

Guard of Honor.

Members of the Army of Cumberland residing in Washington tendered a guard of honor to the remains of President Garfield, while lying in state here The offer was accepted and ex soldiers of the Army of Cumberland are on duty.

Arrival of the Train at Washington

WASHINGTON, Sept 21. The special train bearing the remains of President Garfield reached Washington at 4 35 P. M The passage from Elberon to Washington was one continued manifestation of sympathy and sorrow. In populous cities, in smaller villages and even in the country through which the mournful train passed demonstrations of sympathy and sorrow were ever present. In the large cities multitudes of people assembled and stood absolutely silent with heads uncovered as the train passed by, while the tolling of bells flags flying at half mast and funeral drapery which covered many buildings, all added to the solemnity of the scene.

At numerous points along the route beautiful floral offerings were observed, and at several places the track was literally covered for a distance of more than 100 yards with ferns and flowers Even in the country along the route of the railway there was no lack of evidence of affectionate regard, sympathy and sorrow. Men women and children collected on the porticoes of the residences near the track, at the crossings and on embankments, command ing a near view of the passing train and with bowed and uncovered heads for a fleeting instant as the train rushed past gave evidence of their sorrow

Laborers in the fields watched the coming of the train bearing the dead President and with bared arms and uncovered heads stood mute and sorrowful while the funeral train passed. No incident worthy of note occurred on board during the passage and at 4 35 P M the train slowly entered the depot when the casket was at once removed to the hearse in waiting The funeral party took seats in the carriages and under military escort the procession at once proceeded to the Capitol

How the Remains Were Received

A vast throng of people were assembled about the depot to do honor to the dead. Pennsylvania avenue and approaches, deeply packed with jostling but in every instance quiet and orderly spectators All the force of police was on duty and the approaches to the depot roped off and guarded against all save those participating in the ceremonial, or who held special cards of admission to the depot

The military were drawn up against the east side of Sixth street with their right resting on Pennsylvania avenue. Upon the opposite side of the street in front the depot was a long line of carriages preceded by a hearse which was drawn up directly at the main entrance to Sixth street side The hearse used to bear the remains of the late Vice President Hendricks was furnished by Undertaker Speare of this city and is known as the Centennial hearse It having been used for the purpose at the Centennial exhibition It is draped in black and rich and elegant in all wholly unrelieved by any other color It was drawn by six iron grey horses which with their plumes were also draped in some black

Just before the train entered the depot the platform was cleared by the police and the officers of the Army and Navy to the number of 130 formed in single file upon the left facing the train As the train slowly rolled into the depot every head upon the platform was uncovered and a stillness as of the grave pervaded the vast throng which for more than an hour had been patiently waiting by the roadside

Soon Mrs Garfield assisted by Secretary Blaine, descended from the car following his arm upon her right and that of her son Harry upon her left, she walked directly to the carriage in waiting Her face was completely concealed by a heavy black veil which hung nearly to the ground and whatever emotions she may have experienced were sacred from the sight of those who gazed upon her as the central figure in the sad pageant She descended to the state carriage and was followed by Mollie Garfield, her son Harry and Mrs Rockwell

The others of the Presidential party were President Arthur, who leaned upon the arm of Senator Jones of Nevada Gen Grant and Gen Beale, Gen Swaim and Mrs Swaim Col Rockwell, Col Corbin, Dr Bliss and daughter, Dr Boynton, Dr Agnew, Dr Hamilton, Attorney General MacVeagh wife and two sons Secretary and Mrs Hunt, Secretary and Mrs Robeson, Postmaster General and Mrs James and Secretary Kirkwood The first three carriages received the ladies of the party who did not accompany the procession to the Capitol

After they had moved on a short distance from the entrance, the casket appointed borne upon the shoulders of eight officers of the second artillery detailed from the barracks On the right in single file and headed by Adjutant General Drum were the officers of the army, and on the left the officers of the navy under lead of Rear Admiral Nicolls As the casket was borne to the hearse the marine band stationed across the street played "Nearer my God to Thee" while every head was bowed and many eyes were dimmed The sad strains of sweet funeral music the hush that had fallen upon scores and the grief mirrored on thousands of faces painted a picture that years can not efface from the memory of those who stood near the bier of the dead President

After the casket had been placed in the hearse the remainder of the party entered their carriages and took place in the procession President Arthur and party followed immediately after the hearse and in it were President Arthur Secretary Blaine, Chief Justice Waite and Secretary Windom The carriage containing Mrs Garfield and daughter was driven down Pennsylvania avenue to Fourth street and thence to the residence of Attorney General MacVeagh, in whose guest she will be during her stay in the city As soon as the family and Presidential party had entered their carriages the signal was given by the bugle and the military escort formed in line and the mournful procession started on its way to the Capitol in the following order

Sheridan mounted police, Gen Ayers and mounted staff Washington Light Infantry and band Union Veteran Corps National Rifles Washington Light Guard, Capital City Guard, U S Marine band and drum corps 50 men, detachment of U S Marines, 1 U S Artillery band, four companies of heavy artillery, and one light battery Washington and Columbia Commanderies of Knight Templars Then followed the hearse flanked on either side by a single line of Army and Navy officers among them being Gen Sherman and Corps Drum, Meigs, Sackett Poe Dodge McKeever, Ruggles, Brock, Col Barr and about 60 others of the army, and Rear Admiral Nichols Commodores English and Steard Pay Director Rooker Capt Deckraff and Capt C H Wells Commanders Howell Manly, Howison, Lawson Haines Schroeder, Belden, Wainwright Bartlett, Stockton and Sebree and about 50 others

After the hearse came the carriage of President Arthur with a mounted police men on either side and following it a half dozen other carriages with the members of the Cabinet and others who had accompanied the remains from Elberon A platoon of mounted police brought up in the rear With muffled drums and solemn funeral dirge, the procession filed slowly up the avenue A dense mass lined the sidewalks all the way from Sixth street to the east front of the Capitol, and along this portion of the route the crowd was apparently as great as upon the occasion of the late President's inaugural procession

Hats were removed and head bowed as by a common impulse of deep and unfeigned grief as the procession moved on toward the capitol Here at the east front of the building a vast assemblage had congregated to view the funeral cortege. At the foot of the steps there was a double file of Senators and Representatives headed by their respective officers, awaiting in respectful silence to escort the remains into the rotunda At precisely 5 30 the head of the sad procession moving round the south side of the capitol arrived at the east front, the arms of the militia being reversed and the bands playing a dead march

The order was then given to carry arms and the troops came to a front face while to a muffled beat of the drums, the hearse and its attendant train of carriages drew slowly up in front of the escort. A hush came over the multitude and all reverently uncovered as the casket was carefully lifted from the hearse. The officers of the Army and Navy drew up in parallel lines, on either side of the hearse, and the marine band played again with much sentiment 'Nearer my God to Thee,' as with solemn tread the remains of President Garfield were borne into the rotunda and placed upon the catafalque

The Senators and Representatives preceded and ranged themselves on each side of the dais. Close behind the casket walked President Arthur and Secretary Blaine, who were followed by Chief Justice Waite and Secretary Windom, Gen. Grant, and Secretary Hunt, Secretary Lincoln and Attorney General MacVeagh, Secretary Kirkwood and Postmaster James, Col. Rockwell and Gen. Swaim and Col Corbin and Private Secretary Brown. At 5.20 P. M., the lid of the casket was opened and the face of the late President was exposed to view. Noiselessly President Arthur and Secretary Blaine approached and gazed upon the face of the dead, and then slowly and sadly passed out of the hall

A line was formed by Sergeant-at-Arms Bright, and one by one those present passed and glanced at the emaciated and discolored face of the President The public at large was then admitted and hundreds of persons testified by their reverential conduct and mournful countenances the sorrow which they experienced in looking upon the features of their murdered President

The body will lie in state day and night until Friday evening As already stated a detail of 10 members of the Army of the Cumberland have tendered their services to act as a guard of honor and their offer has been accepted Two relieffs have been elected, one of which will be on duty until 10 o'clock and the second from ten until 2 o'clock

The first relief is composed as follows Col F A Seeley A T Lacey Colonel Stone, General Starkweather, Major J J Noble, Col Crittenden Captain Bosworth Major Love, Captain Crosby, and Colonel Hamilton The following will compose the second relief Major A P Williams, C H Doyle Capt D W Houghton, Col L C Ford, Major Fred Mach, Captain F L Campbell Sergt. A Gardner D. A Scott I T B. W Monro and Sergt Robt Graham

As the shadows of night began to fall the vast dome of the Capitol was illuminated and the dim light falling upon the mournful drapings of the rotunda and upon the face of the dead President served but to heighten the solemnity of the scene

On leaving the capitol this evening President Arthur was driven directly to the residence of Senator Jones of Nevada who a guest he will be during his stay in this city

Mrs Garfield to day expressed her sincere desire not to see the White House again where she has passed so many days of sorrow and anxiety and she will not visit it while in the city, but will remain at the residence of Gen. MacVeagh

REPUBLICAN CONVENTION

In Worcester, Massachusetts,

The Nominations.

SPEECH BY HON T. B. REED.

WORCESTER, Mass Sept 21 The Republican Convention was called to order a few minutes after eleven by Hon Chas A Stott of Lowell chairman of the Republican State Committee On motion of Theodore Bates of Worcester, Hon Chas A Stott was chosen temporary chairman and on motion of the same gentleman the convention chose Col F H Haskell of Gloucester as temporary Secretary

On taking the chair Mr Stott spoke of the peculiar and saddening circumstances under which the convention meets Rev J F Lovering, of Worcester then offered an earnest and feeling prayer. The usual preliminaries attendant upon effecting a permanent organization followed and the convention was organized Lyman S Stone of Newburyport and Benjamin Phipps of Chelsea were appointed to conduct the President Hon W W Crapo, of New Bedford to the chair Crapo was received with applause and proceeded to the delivery of his address

The following is an abstract of Chairman Crapo s address He opened with a warm tribute to the late President and a hearty commendation of the results of his short term of office The obliteration of party lines in the South was considered and the speaker felt that liberal and progressive ideas were asserting themselves in that section No present issue based upon the old time conflict of national supremacy was now before the country, but the Republican party turns with its original earnestness to the new issues which confront it such as the practical questions of business affecting the commercial and industrial pursuits, the best administration of Government, etc, which have hitherto been thrust aside by narrow partisanship, prominent among these is that of civil service

The address was listened to with marked attention and when the confidence and sympathy of the Nation were spoken for President Arthur there was a burst of hearty applause, which broke out even when a moment later the speaker closed

Immediately after the delivery of this address Geo B Loring of Salem, moved that the entire State ticket be unanimously renominated by acclamation Each name was received with enthusiasm and the motion was carried amid another outburst of applause

The speech by Hon Thos B. Reed, M C, of Maine, followed

Mr. Reed was very pleasantly introduced by the President of the Convention, and he had a warm reception as he advanced to the front of the platform His fine physique excited comment, and his resonant voice compelled attention Frequent laughter was created by the humorous way in which he put his common sense remarks while the acceptability of his views was made apparent by equally frequent applause The usual vote of thanks were passed and at 1 15 the convention adjourned.

THE WEATHER.

SUICIDE.

The Missing Body of Henry W Fiske Recovered

Our correspondent writes from Kenduskeag as follows The body of Mr Henry W. Fiske was found Tuesday evening about 5 30 o'clock in Cold Stream Lake, off what is called Rocky Point by a party from Mattawamkeag, guided by Mr. Albert Dill of Enfield Mr Fiske's brother was with the party The body was found in about five feet of water He had a sack containing sixty-two pounds of rocks tied around his neck. Yesterday was quite windy on the Lake and it was supposed that the body drifted ashore, as the sack was much worn It is known that Mr Fiske attempted suicide one week ago Saturday, as the sack with a rope in it was discovered, and he confessed that he intended to take his life He was fifty-four years old, has been twice married and leaves a wife and three children He formerly resided in Bangor on Elm street. No cause for the rash deed can be ascertained

The Meadow Brook Sewer

One of the most important matters that can claim the attention of a city is its sewerage. Imperfect drainage invites disease Pestilence hovers over the city whose sewers are inadequate to its needs The fact was revealed some time ago that eight sewers in this city emptied their contents into Meadow Brook, a natural water course, which so choked the stream that much of the poisonous filth forced its way up through the soil and stood in stagnant, disease breeding pools. Especially was this the case at the park on Upper Broadway. To permanently remedy this evil was an undertaking that would be attended with large expense, and yet its neglect would lay the city liable to indictment, while imperilling the health of its citizens After a lengthy discussion in the City Council and mature deliberation, it was deemed advisable to construct a portion only of the needed sewer at a time, that it might not bear heavily upon the tax-payers. In accordance with an order issued, one of the best sewers ever started in this city has been commenced and completed from Broadway to French street, a distance of 400 feet. It is a six foot sewer, with an eight-inch wall and five feet in the clear. About 135,000 bricks have been used in its construction. It is being covered with four feet of dirt. It will ultimately be extended probably to the Kenduskeag stream, at Morse's Mills.

The Surgeon's Knife.

Wonderful Surgical Operation—Removal of Urinary Stones from the Bladder—Successful.

Mr Simeon Tuttle of Bangor has been treated for seven years by various physicians for what they call Stricture of the Urethra with, I believe, no benefit. He finally consulted Dr David Kennedy of Boston, who found a stone to be Urinary Calculi or Stones in the Bladder. The doctor first once removed a large foreign body with the knife and then gave his great Blood Specific, "Favorite Remedy" to prevent further formation. The entire treatment was entirely successful and Mr Tuttle says every way is quite perfect.

While [illegible] Kidney and Bladder Complaints are in many cases incurable, it is equally true that the Bowels are almost all the cases of Bright's Disease, Diabetes, Gravel, Dropsy, Stone in the Bladder, Suppression of Urine, Retention of Urine, Pain in the Back, Loins and Kidneys, Inflammation of the Bladder, Urinary Diseases, Female Complaints, Nervous Prostration, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Dizziness, Constipation and Piles, Dr David Kennedy's Favorite Remedy is recommended for the entire relief of these distressing complaints. Hundreds of cases of the most decided character and pronounced by eminent physicians to be incurable have been cured by the use of this medicine. It acts gently but promptly on the system, relieving pain in twenty-four hours. It is a perfect laxative, and may be taken by the most delicate invalid or child without fear of pain or injury. It is a sure cure for Constipation, Piles, Dyspepsia, Liver Complaint, Kidney Disease, Female Complaints, Nervous Prostration, Sleeplessness, Dizziness, Headache, Pain in the Back, Loins and Kidneys, Dropsy, Gravel, Stone in the Bladder, Diabetes, Bright's Disease, Suppression of Urine, Retention of Urine
